

p. 95 #6

(a) Coffee was the most expensive on average

(b) No, not always. There are parts of the newspaper boxplot that are higher and parts that are lower than public transportation. So, in general, newspapers are more expensive than public transportation, however there are cities where public transportation is more expensive.

(c) No. Each distribution has a high outlier, and its removal wouldn't change the overall conclusions.